

The Fediverse

An introduction to the Fediverse.

Introduction:

- System administrator in New Jersey
- Long-time Linux user, long time Fediverse denizen.

Overview

- The fediverse is a collection of protocols, servers, and users.
- Together they form networks that can communicate together.
- Users can exchange short messages, blog-style posts, music, and videos throughout.

Some history

- In 2008, Evan Prodromou created a twitter-like service called identi.ca. It used the Ostatus protocol.
- In about 2012, he changed his service to use a new protocol, pump.io. He released the status.net protocol to the FSF, renamed as GNU/social. The fediverse continued along for several years.
- March 2016, Eugen Rochco (Gargron) created Mastodon, which used GNU/social with a tweetdeck-like interface. This gained some popularity.
- 2018, ActivityPub, a new protocol was accepted as a standardized protocol. Most fediverse platforms have adopted it. Authored by Evan P., Chris Lemmer-Weber and others, it expanded upon the previous into a better protocol.

Federation

- Most services are run by a single company or organization. A single silo that your data is trapped in, the only way to share with others is to have them join that service.
- Federation allows users of different services to inter-operate with one another, without creating an account for each shared resource. (Largely)
- System operators can block other instances in case of egregious issues, and users can likewise block users or instances to improve their experience.

Differences in failures:

- .club domain was taken out due to DNS issues
 - Some fediverse instances were unavailable
 - Most other instances were still running
- Facebook had BGP issues.
 - All Facebook services offline
 - Hard to resolve due to dependencies on name resolution
 - Media and many others lost minds (Fediverse laughs)

More services

- There are many new services that all use the ActivityPub protocol to work together

What some call "Fediverse"...

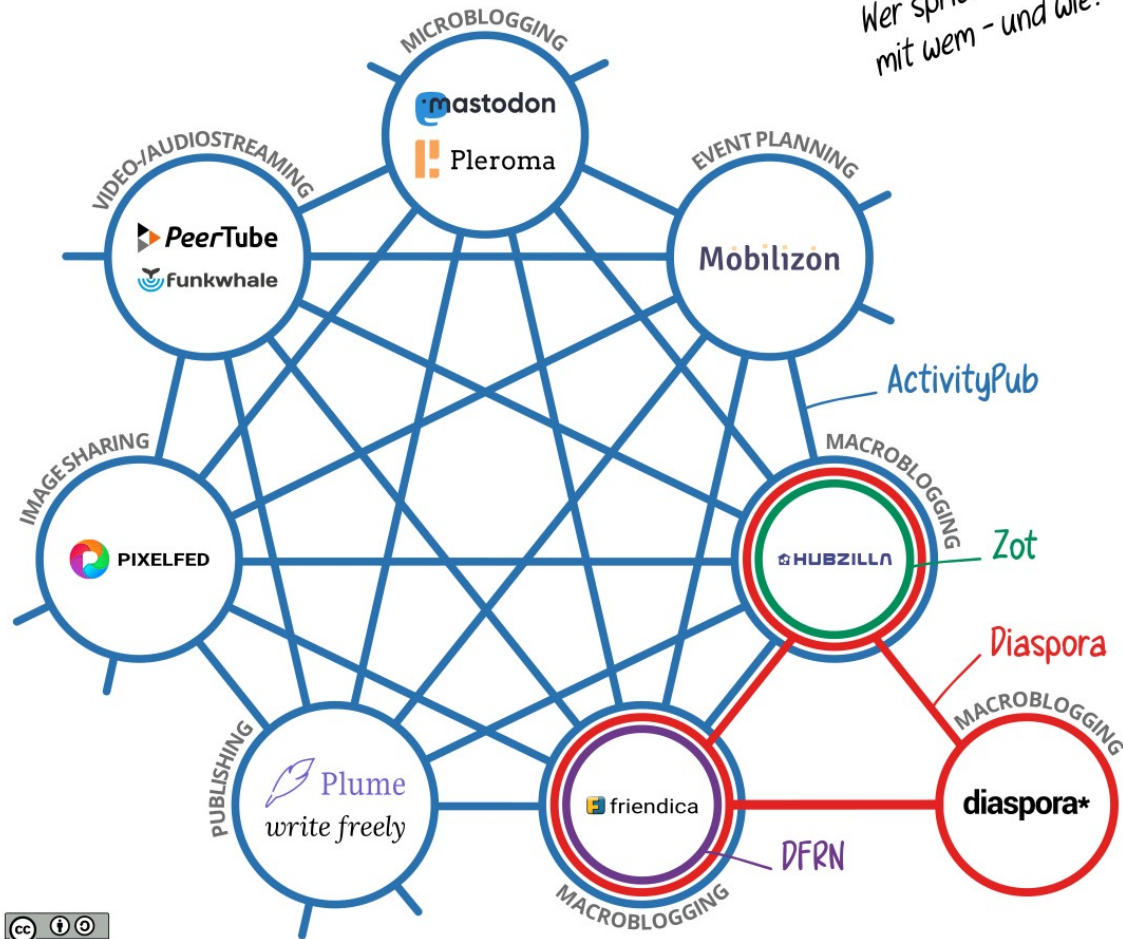

... is just different social networks speaking
ActivityPub to each other.

Interoperation

This bill naively undermines #encryption.

"Encryption is a powerful tool to protect private information like passwords and financial details. However, it also can be used by criminals..." - Sen. Durbin

Have you contacted your Senator to share your disapproval of this criminalization of #privacy?

I wonder what the view was like through this window when people lived here hundreds of years ago...

A New HOPE

About this event

A New HOPE will be a transformational conference for the hacker community -- in so many ways. We've all been through a lot, and it's been challenging. It is a time to come together again to inspire, transform, and share HOPE.

A New HOPE will be live and in person, and at a great new venue. St. John's University has more space, more possibilities, and offers us much more support for HOPE far into the future.

We will miss our old long-time home, the Hotel Pennsylvania, which is, sadly, being demolished. But we are now ready for our next chapter. We hope you'll join us for this this exciting bit of history as we create A New HOPE together.

Where to start

- joinmastodon.org
- <https://fediverse.party/en/portal/servers>
- fediverse.info
- joinfediverse.wiki

Conclusion:

- The Fediverse is a way to use the web in a more individual way, either by choosing an instance with a community that suits your needs, or running your own server, and making it exactly the way you want.
- It avoids the advertising, algorithms, and other unpleasantities that plague some other social networks.

Where to learn more:

A few links to find more about the Fediverse:

- General info:

this slide shamelessly stolen from Mauricio Uribe (with permission) <https://mxuribe.com>

Thank you.

- I'll be happy to entertain any questions, or further demonstrate what I can on the fediverse.
